Key Learnings

Wow our customers

In today’s session, we explored what it truly means to ‘Wow Our Customers’ and deliver experiences that go beyond expectations. This handout brings together a clear summary of all the activities we completed, along with the key takeaways from each theme. Use it as a quick reference to reflect on your participation and to help you apply these principles consistently in your daily customer interactions, so every touchpoint becomes an opportunity to create impact.

“Customer” defined: Seeing the customer in every interaction

“Customer” isn’t just the external client, it includes your internal teams, peers, and cross-functional partners who rely on your work. The way you think, communicate, and collaborate directly shapes every customer experience. Research consistently shows that customer excellence begins with strong internal service, empathy, and proactive problem-solving. Every handoff, whether it’s code, content, data, or support, is an opportunity to create value and make a meaningful impact.

Activities done:

- ‘WOW’ Moments Icebreaker: Participants identified what makes an experience memorable (e.g., empathy, responsiveness, extra effort). This helped the group identify what emotionally memorable service feels like, and which behaviors create it.

- Interactive poll: We explored key behaviors like empathy, responsiveness, clarity, problem-solving.
  The poll revealed what the cohort collectively values most in a great experience.

“Customer” defined: Seeing the customer in every interaction

Interactive activity: “Who Did You Create Value For?” Identified recent internal/external “customers” and how value was created.

Key takeaways

Every interaction matters, even the smallest actions shape customer perception. Strong internal collaboration drives external success, and thinking like the customer helps you anticipate needs and deliver real value. Customer experience is everyone’s responsibility, and a culture built on empathy, clarity, and accountability strengthens trust and teamwork.

What you’re taking back

You leave with a practical mindset that “every interaction has a customer,” along with a clearer awareness of how your communication, empathy, and ownership influence outcomes. Most importantly, you take back a commitment to small, intentional actions that create consistent “Wow!” moments each day.

What is ServiceNow University?: The university of you

ServiceNow University (SNU) is a personalized learning ecosystem, not just a course library, designed to support your skill-building, growth, and innovation in an AI-driven world. Continuous learning strengthens collaboration, communication, and overall customer excellence, helping teams work smarter and deliver more impact. Research from Deloitte and LinkedIn Learning reinforces that learning-centric teams adapt faster, collaborate more effectively, and consistently deliver stronger customer outcomes.

Activities done:

- Live Navigation Demo: Explored SNU, how to find courses/paths, track progress, and plan learning.
- Breakout Activity – “Design Your Learning Path”: Participants identified their learning superpowers, chose a course or path aligned with their goals, and uncovered shared themes across the group, strengthening collective awareness and showing how individual learning supports team-wide growth.

What you’re taking back

You leave this session with a chosen learning pathway for this quarter, a clearer understanding of your learning strengths, and the awareness that your personal growth directly contributes to stronger customer and team outcomes.

Think with the customer in mind: Be the first to make a difference - The power of customer zero

Customer Zero means being the first user, the first tester, and the first experience-maker before real customers ever touch the product. In this role, you help identify gaps early, reduce friction, improve workflows, and directly influence product quality. By thinking like the customer from day one, you pave the way for smoother journeys and stronger, more impactful experiences.

Activities done:

Activity: “Be the First to Spot It!”

In this activity, you stepped into the Customer Zero mindset by imagining yourself as the very first user of a new feature or workflow. You identified what you would check first, usability, clarity, performance, navigation, and then suggested improvements that would create real value for future users. By spotting gaps early and thinking through the customer’s lens, you practiced the core skill of shaping better, smoother, and more impactful product experiences before they reach the customer.

Think with the customer in mind: Be the first to make a difference – The power of customer zero

Key takeaways

Being the first to make a difference means your feedback shapes the product long before it reaches customers. Using a customer lens early helps you ask, “How will this impact the user experience?” and ensures every decision is grounded in real value. Your voice truly matters, your input leads to stronger, more intuitive solutions. Through Customer Zero, you accelerate quality by spotting issues early and directly improving global customer satisfaction.

What you’re taking back

You walk away with a proactive approach to testing, learning, and sharing insights. You gain confidence in influencing the customer experience before anything is released. Most importantly, you carry a mindset that positions you as the “first customer” of your own work, with the power to shape better outcomes every day.

Overall session takeaways

You create “Wow!” moments through empathy, clarity, and ownership. Every role, regardless of function, directly contributes to both internal and external customer experiences.

Continuous learning is your superpower in an evolving, AI-enabled world, and ServiceNow University stands beside you as a partner in ongoing growth.

By embracing the Customer Zero mindset, you influence real products and real customer journeys, proving that small actions lead to big impact and truly memorable customer experiences.
